Cow Print Summer: How the Kardashian-Approved Trend Became 2025's Boldest Fashion Statement

When it comes to predicting the next big trend, forget runways or TikTok challenges—the real bellwether is a Kardashian toddler. Recently, Khloé Kardashian's daughter, True Thompson, was spotted carrying the now sold-out Prada Galleria Cow Print Bag, and just like that, the era of leopard prints was declared over. Welcome to Cow Print Summer 2025.

Animal prints have long been a staple in fashion—zebra, snake, and leopard have each had their moment. But in a post-Cowboy Carter world, where Bella Hadid has embraced rodeo chic and cowboy boots remain a staple, the shift to cow-inspired fashion feels inevitable. This season, Holstein and Guernsey-inspired prints are everywhere, from bags and belts to jeans, coats, and dresses.

Unlike its big-cat predecessors, cow print is surprisingly easy to style. A statement bag or sneakers paired with classic denim adds a playful twist, while a full cow print dress can make a bold fashion-forward statement. Whether in black-and-white hides or earthy brown tones, the trend blends Western vibes with contemporary streetwear appeal.

And while cow print may be crowned the hottest summer trend, its versatility makes it one to watch in fall too—particularly in coats and boots. With the fashion set bidding farewell to leopard skirts and shearling accessories, cowhide-inspired looks are fast becoming the moo-vement of the moment.

So, whether you're going subtle with accessories or bold with head-to-toe prints, now is the time to embrace the trend that's grazing its way into every wardrobe.
