

A Glittering Retrospective: India Couture Week 2025's Finest Moments

Published on 28 Aug 2025 | By IFI Correspondent

India Couture Week 2025 offered a breathtaking tapestry of design, weaving timeless heritage, daring innovation, and star-studded showstoppers into one spectacular fashion spectacle.

One of the standout debuts came from Aisha Rao, whose “Wild At Heart” collection stunned with maximalist artistry born from repurposed fabrics and theatrical flair. By turning discarded textiles into couture masterpieces, Rao captured the transformative power of sustainability and creativity, infusing the runway with unapologetic emotionality.

Amit Aggarwal, known for his futuristic aesthetic, returned with Antevorta—a hypnotic, bio-futuristic collection that celebrated the unseen wonders beneath human form. His avant-garde silhouettes rippled with metallic sheen and sculptural textures, straddling the space between art and architecture with graceful choreography.

Layered into the evening’s magic were moments of radiant pageantry—Riddhima Kapoor Sahni became the shimmering muse for Suneet Verma’s “Sehr,” a collection suffused with sequins, florals, and wistful romance. Khushi Kapoor closed one of the most daring runway shows, adorned in a couture ensemble inspired by the traditional payal (anklet), seamlessly translated into avant-garde art—an armor of cultural motifs.

The grand finale came courtesy of JJ Valaya, whose immersive showcase marked his illustrious 33-year legacy in Indian couture. With Rasha Thadani and Ibrahim Ali Khan presiding over the cinematic pageantry, the runway transformed into a palace, echoing threads of royal craftsmanship, heritage, and storytelling.

Why ICW 2025 Stood Out

- Heritage Reimagined: Designers honored Indian traditions—like disco embroidery and iconic cultural symbols—while giving them modern salons of expression.
- Bold Storytelling: Each collection told its own narrative—from ecological reinvention to mythic futurism—making couture feel dynamic and deeply personal.
- Diverse Voices, Unified Glamour: From Aisha Rao’s “Wild At Heart” to Valaya’s regal finale, the event showcased India’s couture breadth—from emerging disruptors to royal stalwarts.

India Couture Week 2025 wasn’t just a fashion event—it was a poetic resonance of India’s sartorial past meeting its visionary future. It proved that couture remains most powerful when it tells stories, embraces spectacle, and champions artistry beyond boundaries.
