

Emma Stone Elevates Red-Carpet Lingerie with a Retro Arm Cuff at Venice

Emma Stone made a memorable return to the Venice Film Festival, turning heads not just with her outfit but with a standout accessory moment. The actress stepped out in a striking Louis Vuitton ensemble—a halter-neck tank dress layered under an asymmetrical black lace skirt, modernly nodding to the lingerie-as-outerwear trend. She styled the look with sleek sunglasses, ankle-tie heels, and a matching handbag.

What truly stole the spotlight, though, was her chic gold cuff bracelet, worn high on her bicep. This retro placement, reminiscent of fashion moments from the '60s through the '80s, is trending anew—reintroduced by modern fashion icons. By moving the cuff from the wrist to the arm, Emma added a bold, geometric flair that balanced the outfit's delicate lace with architectural structure and a touch of vintage glam.

This fashion moment reflects a broader shift in celebrity style in 2025: the lingerie-as-eveningwear aesthetic continues to dominate, from slip skirts to sheer lace overlays. Emma's look resonates with the contemporary jewelry revival, where bold vintage-inspired pieces are being reinterpreted for modern red-carpet styling.

Emma Stone's Venice appearance was more than just a fashion statement—it was a reminder that daring accessories, when styled with intent, can transform an outfit. The bicep cuff wasn't simply part of the look—it was the detail that redefined the entire narrative.
