Ready for a Style Double Take?

At the Caught Stealing New York City premiere on August 26, Zoe Kravitz and Austin Butler made “twinning” look absolutely fierce. Coordinating in head-to-toe black, their ensembles channeled a sleek, grungy glamour that perfectly matched the film’s edgy tone.

Zoe Kravitz: Modern Y2K Chic

Zoe Kravitz stole the show in a custom Saint Laurent two-piece featuring a structured, ab-baring top with a sweetheart neckline, paired with a high-slit black skirt that dipped V-style at the waist—directly nodding to the early-2000s aesthetic. Her only accessory? An insane, 14.71-carat Jessica McCormack diamond ring worn boldly on her thumb, letting her minimal makeup and sleek hair do the rest of the styling work.

As if that wasn’t edgy enough, she later swapped into a hot-pink Kallmeyer Eloise mini dress with silver sandals, taking her outfit to the next level during the afterparty.

Austin Butler: Leather, No Shirt, Just Boldness

Austin Butler matched the intensity of Kravitz’s look by going shirtless under a Givenchy leather blazer and trousers crafted by Sarah Burton. He accessorized with squarish sunglasses, sleek patent shoes, and a gold chain finish that sealed the look with serious swagger.

Why Their Fashion Resonated

- Power Pairing: Their mirrored black outfits felt like fashion storytelling—bold, connected, and intentionally dramatic.

- Nostalgic Edge: Zoe's nod to early-2000s noughties style brought an R&B romantic vibe; Austin's leather-forward ensemble evoked a confident, unapologetic masculinity.
- Wordless Chemistry: Their styling deepened the speculation, not just as co-stars, but as captivating style collaborators on and off screen.

This Caught Stealing red carpet appearance wasn't just another movie premiere—it was storytelling through wardrobe. Zoe Kravitz and Austin Butler weren't merely promoting their film; they were defining a style moment—part grunge romance, part cinematic power duo.
