Kelly Clarkson marked her first public sighting since the tragic passing of her ex-husband, Brandon Blackstock, with an accessory that carried deep emotional meaning.

At Los Angeles International Airport, Clarkson appeared dressed in all-black—including a cowboy hat and sunglasses—accompanied by her sister and their two children. What captured attention, however, was the striking $22,500 tarot pendant she wore around her neck. The piece is Sorellina Jewelry’s Le Stelle (“The Star”) pendant, framing a powerful message of healing and hope. Crafted in 18-karat yellow gold with black onyx, sapphires, tsavorite, and diamonds, the pendant symbolizes renewal and courage amid darkness.

The Star tarot card, depicted on the charm, represents light after hardship. According to its description, it embodies optimism, inspiration, rejuvenation, and the idea that “even in the darkest of times, there will always come light.” In her moment of vulnerability and strength, Clarkson’s choice resonated as a quiet yet emotionally layered statement.

The timing of her wearing such a statement piece couldn’t have been more poignant. The appearance follows Stell’s three-year battle with melanoma and the conclusion of their divorce, which took a public and legally charged journey. For Clarkson, now focused on caring for her kids and resuming her career, the pendant serves as both personal talisman and public testament to resilience.

The necklace did more than accessorize her black ensemble—it communicated an emotional narrative. It signaled her journey toward healing, her resolve to move forward, and her choice to embrace courage and hope. Sources say she’s leaning on family and strength to navigate grief, and this jewelry piece speaks louder than words.

Kelly Clarkson’s choice to wear the 22k healing pendant wasn’t just a fashion statement—it was an expression of resilience, love, and renewal. In one understated accessory, she conveyed an entire emotional journey. As she returns to the public eye, this symbol of hope reminds us that healing—from grief, from public scrutiny, and from loss—can be both deeply personal and beautifully visible.
