

Son Ye-jin's Minimalist Masterclass at Venice

Published on 01 Sep 2025 | By IFI Correspondent

South Korean actress Son Ye-jin made a striking debut at the 82nd Venice International Film Festival, embracing the elegance of simplicity with a refined all-black ensemble that proved once again: minimalism reigns supreme.

Landing on the red carpet with effortless grace, Son chose a sleek, sleeveless black top paired with a flowing long skirt—an understated yet powerful look that didn't rely on sequins or over-the-top theatrics to captivate. Her presence spoke volumes, embodying the essence of chic understatement.

Fashion Clarity: All-Black, All Eyes On Her

In a landscape often dominated by statement gowns and flamboyant flair, Son's choice was deliberate. The clean silhouette of the black separates emphasized her poise and confidence, proving that refinement often makes the biggest impact.

Paired with a natural makeup look and softly styled hair, her style echoed timeless classics—reminding everyone present that sometimes the most compelling fashion choices are those that whisper, not shout.

A Historic Film Moment in the Making

Son Ye-jin's appearance wasn't just about fashion; it was deeply tied to a cinematic milestone. She stars as Mi-Ri in Park Chan-wook's much-anticipated black comedy No Other Choice, alongside Lee Byung-hun and Park Hee-Soon.

The film has made history as the first South Korean entry in 13 years to compete in the festival's main competition—since Pietà in 2012.

This return to Venice marked Park Chan-wook's comeback to the festival after two decades—his last being Lady Vengeance in 2005. His film's inclusion underscores its importance, and Son's presence further amplifies its significance.

Red Carpet Chemistry & Industry Buzz

Beyond fashion and film posters, Son Ye-jin and Lee Byung-hun illuminated Venice with palpable charm. In photos shared on Instagram, the duo's chemistry was evident—his sharp monogram jacket and her black dress formed a striking visual duo. Behind the scenes, Son was spotted smiling comfortably amidst the cast and director, encapsulating a moment of cinematic and personal grace.

Meanwhile, at media events, Son shared how meaningful this debut is for her career: "I'm incredibly moved and honored that my first international film festival is Venice. I'm thrilled to attend..."

Why This Moment Matters

Final Thoughts: Elegance, Resilience, and Legacy

Son Ye-jin's Venice debut was more than a red carpet appearance—it was a statement of artistry, resilience, and cultural pride. Her minimalist fashion echoed her dignified approach, even when handled surprises like a missing social media account.

Equally notable is the weight of her film project: a long-awaited return to Venice for both her and Park Chan-wook, a cinematic comeback enveloped in critical expectation. In one seamless moment, Son Ye-jin showcased how fashion, film, and quiet strength can converge to create a moment that’s as stylish as it is culturally resonant.
