London Sneaker School has launched ‘Kickback,’ a platform enabling creators to design, launch, and sell footwear. This initiative aims to make sneaker design more accessible and transparent.

Empowering Creators

The platform gives users tools to bring their footwear ideas to life effortlessly. Additionally, creators can submit designs, collaborate with manufacturers, and receive direct consumer feedback. Consequently, aspiring designers gain practical experience and exposure while reducing traditional industry barriers significantly.

Innovative Reward System

Supporters, known as “Kickbackers,” back shoe designs and earn rewards. These include financial incentives, early access to releases, and a voice in product development.

Open-Source Footwear

The debut collection, SKL, is open-source. Design patterns are available for download, remix, and creation. This approach encourages learning and creativity in shoemaking.

Collaborations and Events

During London Fashion Week, Kickback hosted panels, workshops, and launch parties to engage participants directly. Furthermore, attendees explored dyeing techniques, customizations, and the future of sneaker design collaboratively. The events, sponsored by Base and Monster Energy, highlighted the growing influence of community-driven platforms.

‘Kickback’ represents a shift towards democratizing footwear design. By empowering creators and fostering community involvement, it challenges traditional industry structures. This initiative aligns with London Sneaker School’s commitment to making sneaker design more accessible and transparent.
