

Lily James Debuts Cognac Leather Power Look in NYC

Published on 20 Sep 2025 | By IFI Correspondent

Lily James showcased a stunning tonal leather ensemble in New York City. Heading to a taping of Good Morning America, she wore a belted cognac nappa leather jacket from Prada, featuring a scarf detail that added both movement and structure. Paired with a matching mini skirt, the outfit echoed 1970s power dressing reimagined for 2025.

Accessories That Elevate

James complemented her outfit with accessories that added sophistication and contrast. She carried a white Prada Galleria Patent Leather Mini Bag, providing a crisp counterpoint to the warm leather tones. Her footwear consisted of white Prada antiques leather pumps with a pointed toe and slim heel, elongating the line of the leg and balancing the mini skirt's proportions. Dmy Studios Juno sunglasses framed her face with angular precision, completing the look.

Effortless Elegance

Her long, wavy hair softened the structured leather, while her makeup remained understated, allowing the textures and cuts of the outfit to take center stage. The overall effect was one of effortless composure: a celebrity spotted moment that felt both paparazzi-ready and editorially styled.

A Fashion Statement

James' ensemble taps into a broader revival of leather as a daytime staple. Once reserved for outerwear, tonal leather sets are now being embraced as full outfits—a trend seen on runways from Milan to New York. Her look proves that leather can be casual chic, everyday attire, and front-row fashion all at once.
