

Inside Harsh Varrdhan Kapoor's Hunt for Fashion's Rarest Pieces

Published on 23 Sep 2025 | By IFI Correspondent

Harsh Varrdhan Kapoor views fashion as more than clothing; it's a personal art form.

Therefore, each acquisition involves careful research, patience, and dedication. For instance, he sourced orange denim by Gallery Dept., customized by Chrome Hearts, for $15,000. Furthermore, securing rare pieces requires high-end connections and persistent efforts in niche markets.

A Curated Wardrobe

His collection is like a curated archive, reflecting individuality and taste.

Notably, it includes Chrome Hearts x Birkenstock sandals, Louis Vuitton monogram jeans, and Balenciaga denim by Demna. Additionally, he owns a Mike Amiri x Wes Lang co-ord set and Converse x Kartik Research Chuck Taylors. Also, rare watches like the Audemars Piguet Royal Oak and Rolex Cosmograph Daytona enhance his exclusive collection.

Methodical and Passionate Collector

Kapoor approaches fashion with precision and mindfulness.

He treats every piece as a story, preserving its integrity carefully. For example, losing a rare jacket or a small accessory is a significant regret.

Consequently, his wardrobe reflects discipline, reverence, and genuine passion for style.

Lifestyle Intertwined with Fashion

Moreover, his fashion choices connect with his interests in music, film, and art.

He curates his space with vintage boutique aesthetics, including high-end audio equipment and collectible CDs. Thus, his style emerges not only from clothing but from a holistic lifestyle vision.

Fashion as Storytelling

Each piece tells a story, linking rarity with personal meaning. Hence, Kapoor demonstrates fashion as a medium for individuality, creativity, and expression. Through patience, curation, and vision, he transforms wardrobes into personal art galleries.
