At London Fashion Week 2025, Jacqueline Fernandez made a statement attending Anamika Khanna's debut show for her new label AK|OK at Hamleys. Rather than blending in, she embraced boldness. She wore an oversized blazer-and-shorts ensemble that featured loud, graphic prints. The outfit nodded to mythological inspiration from the collection while keeping a relaxed, edgy silhouette.

Print, Proportion & Play

Jacqueline's blazer was the highlight. It carried bold geometric and myth-inspired motifs—patterns that echoed the artistic themes Khanna infused in her collection. Meanwhile, the shorts balanced the blazer, giving a summer-ready yet runway-suitable vibe. The proportions—oversized top, shorter bottom—created visual contrast and energy.

Styling

Rather than piling on accessories, Jacqueline kept her look grounded. She opted for minimal jewellery so the prints could dominate. Her footwear and styling remained streamlined, letting the outfit do the talking. This made the look feel modern, comfortable, and wearable.

Symbolism & Fashion Statement

Jacqueline's choice reflected a larger movement seen in AK|OK's debut: blending Indian craft, heritage narratives, and experimental design into fashion that can be worn casually and confidently. Her bold prints ??????????? the theme that Indian motifs aren't just for formal wear; they can translate into relaxed, stylish ensembles for global stages
