

Greta Lee Turns Heads with Bold Two-Tone Suits

Published on 10 Oct 2025 | By IFI Correspondent

Greta Lee, currently in the spotlight for her role in Tron: Ares, is proving she's not just a force on screen, but also on the style circuit. During a flurry of promotional appearances in New York City, she served up two standout looks that reframed what press tour dressing can be.

First Look: Neon Edge Meets Classic Lines

For her appearance on Live with Kelly and Mark, Lee opted for an audacious two-tone ensemble from Still Kelly. The suit combined navy pinstripe tailoring with bursts of bright green accents — a bold choice that's already making waves in fall fashion circles. Underneath, she wore a neon chartreuse shirt whose bottom buttons were undone.

Her accessories complemented without overpowering: black patent leather heels, Oliver Peoples sunglasses, and Tiffany & Co. drop earrings. The effect? A modern balance between boldness and polish.

Second Look: Sculpted Minimalism in Black

Later, Lee switched into a second, more sculptural suit — this time from The Row's Winter 2025 line. Firstly the silhouette was sharply contoured: an hourglass blazer in deep black, paired with matching leggings. Secondly crisp white shirt peeked from beneath. To round off the look, she wore burgundy-lens sunglasses and left the bottom jacket button undone.

This second outfit leaned into a futuristic minimalism that echoed current runway trends — structure over flourish, precision over excess.

Style Significance: Trends, Identity & Vision

Lee's suiting choices underscore two things: her evolving fashion identity, and how she is leaning into suiting as a narrative form of dressing. W Magazine notes that her "graphic, well-tailored suits ... prove you don't have to revert to the infantile 'Office Siren' aesthetic." W Magazine Across her press tour, Greta Lee is pushing boundaries around gendered dressing, color usage, and how a suit can tell a story.

For more style updates & exclusive fashion stories follow indiafashionicon.com