

Dakota Johnson Joins Valentino as Global Brand Ambassador

Published on 29 Oct 2025 | By IFI Correspondent

In a striking development this week, Dakota Johnson has been named the global brand ambassador for Valentino.

Her appointment comes under the leadership of Valentino's creative director Alessandro Michele, marking one of his early high-profile ambassadors since taking the helm.

Johnson comments on the role: "I'm happy to be joining the Valentino family, and beyond grateful to my dearest friend Alessandro Michele."

This ambassadorship is significant for several reasons:

- It signals Valentino's strategic direction under Michele by aligning with an actor known for both serious and popular roles, the brand bridges cine-culture with luxury.
- Johnson has previously been with Gucci during Michele's earlier tenure there, so this move also reflects continuity in their creative alliance.
- For Johnson, this expands her fashion stature beyond red-carpet appearances into a long-term brand narrative.

What to expect next

With the new partnership in place, the following are likely:

- Johnson will appear in upcoming Valentino campaigns, likely tied to both ready-to-wear and couture under Michele's aesthetic.
- Her public appearances and red-carpet outfits may increasingly feature Valentino designs, reinforcing the ambassador role.
- Valentino may also leverage Johnson's film profile for cross-media exposure (e.g., screenings, brand-supported events) given her active acting career.
