At the Harper's Bazaar India Women of the Year Awards 2025, fashion designer Anamika Khanna made a memorable appearance that balanced quiet elegance with sartorial gravitas. The evening honoured Khanna for her lasting influence on Indian fashion and her role in redefining classic silhouettes through craft.

The look that stole quiet attention

Khanna opted for a refined ensemble that spoke volumes without shouting. According to the official social-media posts from the event, she wore a crisp white shirt paired with what media outlets described as a “black embellished ... layered ensemble”. The monochrome pairing — white top, black outer layer. Meanwhile creates a striking visual contrast emblematic of Khanna’s signature blend of modern tailoring and traditional Indian aesthetics.

While detailed descriptions of the fabric and cut are limited in public reports, the outfit was widely praised on Instagram reels.

Why the styling matters

- Identity alignment: As a designer celebrated for merging Indian craft with contemporary silhouettes, Khanna's ensemble embodied her brand DNA — clean structural tailoring (white shirt) paired with an embellished statement layer rooted in couture.
- Fashion diplomacy: The outfit underscored that bold colour or heavy embellishment isn't necessary to make a strong red-carpet moment. The subtlety and contrast did the work, reflecting Khanna's status as an industry veteran rather than a trend-chaser.
- Event-appropriate: At a platform celebrating women of influence across creative field. Khanna's look balances professional poise with designer flair.
