At the Harper's Bazaar Women of the Year Awards 2025, held in Mumbai, Mona Patel arrived looking every bit deserving of her Style Icon honour. The evening celebrated women of substance—those shaping business, fashion, culture and purpose.

Patel's appearance commanded attention: confident, refined and aligned with the dual narrative of her entrepreneurial drive and fashion-forward identity.

The look: tailoring meets modern minimalism

While detailed public disclosure of her exact outfit's designer and fabrication remains limited, what we do know points to a look that fused sharp structure with minimalist elegance:

- She opted for a silhouette with clean lines and strong shoulders—evoking tailored power dressing more than ornate glamour.
- The colour palette appeared to favour neutral or deep muted tones, allowing the cut and fabric to do the talking.
- The styling leaned minimal in accessories yet refined—jewellery was present but understated, balancing rather than competing with the outfit.

Why this choice works

- Authority in style: As Style Icon, Patel's look needed to speak of leadership. A structured, modern outfit achieved this much better than overt embellishment might have.
- Alignment with her story: Known as an entrepreneur, philanthropist and couture collector, her outfit bridged corporate polish and fashion cred.
- Red-carpet relevance: The awards event demanded glamour, but in a way that felt current and intentional. Patel struck that balance—refined yet impactful.
- Less is more: By focusing on silhouette and presence rather than heavy ornament, she stood out for maturity and thoughtful style rather than theatricality.
