At the third annual Global Leadership Summit held by CNBC?TV18 in Mumbai, Deepika Padukone made a memorable appearance in a sophisticated ensemble from Sabyasachi. The outfit comprised a rich cashmere jacket paired with deep-velvet trousers — a nod to classic tailoring infused with the designer's signature opulence.

Craft Meets Context

The choice of cashmere and velvet communicates both luxury and gravitas. The cashmere jacket conveyed refined texture, while the velvet trousers added depth and drama. Styled simply and elegantly, the look bridged the worlds of leadership-wear and red-carpet glamour.

Why It Resonates

- The pairing of anchored materials (cashmere, velvet) reflects a growing trend of heritage fabrics re-imagined for modern occasions.
- By choosing Sabyasachi — a designer known for celebrating Indian craftsmanship — Deepika aligned her attire with a subtle cultural ethos, while presenting it in a globally relevant format.
- On a leadership stage rather than a typical film-promo or fashion event, the look underlines how style is evolving in India: more versatile, more meaningful, and less about spectacle alone.

Deepika Padukone's Sabyasachi look at the summit wasn't just about fashion—it was about identity, presence and purpose. The refined aesthetics, choice of textures and location of the event combined to make a subtle but strong statement about modern Indian luxury and poise.
