Global pop icon Shakira delivered a deeply moving performance during her Las Mujeres Ya No Lloran World Tour when she invited her two sons — Milan Piqué Mebarak and Sasha Piqué Mebarak — onstage to sing with her for the first time. To mark this special milestone, she chose to rewear a custom couture gown by Indian designer Gaurav Gupta, the very ensemble she originally debuted on the tour's opening night — a testament to the significance of the moment.

The performance unfolded at Estadio Vélez Sarsfield, where Shakira and her young sons performed “Acróstico”, a tender song she wrote as a tribute to her children. Shakira shared on Instagram how “magical” it was to witness her sons express their musical talents, creating a heartfelt memory she said would last forever.

Shakira's couture look — originally created by Gaurav Gupta for Las Mujeres Ya No Lloran — combines dramatic artistry with symbolic storytelling. The design features a Lunar Wolf breastplate, sculpted with the image of a she-wolf, representing fierce maternal protection and strength. Paired with an Ocean Wave sculpted silk organza skirt, the outfit poetically reflects the emotional and physical connections that span across seas and stages, much like the bond between mother and sons.

Gupta's couture creations have previously garnered international attention for their sculptural depth and conceptual drama, with pieces that blend fashion with symbolic narratives. This particular gown — celebrated for its flowing, almost oceanic silhouette — accentuates the poetic theme of connection, movement, and emotional depth that resonated throughout Shakira's performance.

The mother-son performance not only highlighted Shakira's musical ability and emotional connection to her family but also reinforced the growing global appeal of high-fashion collaborations across cultures — with an Indian designer's couture playing a starring role on an international music stage.

Fans praised the moment online, celebrating both the touching family milestone and Shakira's bold fashion statement, making it one of the most memorable highlights of her world tour so far
