Bollywood actress Aditi Rao Hydari recently turned heads with a striking ethnic look, opting for an archival red angrakha-style kurta designed by Anand Kabra from his 2013 collection. The choice highlights not just her personal style but the enduring appeal of classic pieces in contemporary fashion.

Vintage Design Meets Modern Grace

The rich red kurta, originally part of Kabra's earlier repertoire, features a high neckline and a distinctive diagonal panel with dense gold embroidery — a hallmark of the designer's structured yet elegant aesthetic. Paired with ivory palazzo pants detailed with gold and rose-gold accents, the ensemble blends traditional Indian craftsmanship with modern silhouettes.

Hydari kept her hair and makeup minimal, with softly defined eyes and a muted lip, allowing the outfit's vibrant colour and embroidery to take centre stage. Simple gold jhumkas complemented the look without overwhelming it, bridging heritage and contemporary poise.

Style Impact

Hydari's look is sparking conversations on how classic designs can be reimagined for today's wardrobe. Fashion experts say such choices reflect a growing appreciation for heritage fashion over fleeting trends, as discerning audiences seek meaningful and culturally grounded style statements.
