Bollywood actor and environmental advocate Dia Mirza made a striking style statement in a Banarasi silk ensemble by renowned Indian designer Anita Dongre, embracing the idea of quiet luxury—an elegant, understated aesthetic rooted in heritage and purpose. In choosing a handwoven, heritage textile for her appearance, Mirza underscored fashion that celebrates craftsmanship and sustainability as much as style.

Anita Dongre’s Banarasi Ensemble: A Blend of Craft and Classic Style

The outfit at the centre of attention was a coordinating Banarasi silk jacket and matching trousers from Dongre’s collection. Its rich brocade weave incorporated botanical motifs — a nod to nature — while the ensemble’s tailoring and silhouette remained refined and minimal, creating a look that balanced tradition with contemporary sophistication.

Styled with minimal accessories that complemented rather than overshadowed the textile’s depth, Mirza’s look embodied a quiet luxury philosophy: celebrating authenticity, craftsmanship and heritage textile techniques without excessive ornamentation.

Why Banarasi Weaves Matter in Conscious Fashion

Banarasi textiles are among India’s most renowned handwoven traditions, historically crafted by generations of skilled artisans. By highlighting such work on a mainstream platform, both Mirza and Dongre spotlight the value of sustaining heritage crafts in modern wardrobes — a subtle but powerful statement in fashion that goes beyond trend cycles
